Defining our Legacy

Lt. Col. Timothy "Wedge" O'Toole
111th Operations Support Flight Commander

Legacies are a unique phenomenon in that they emerge only after an organization ceases to exist. You can repair an organization's reputation since it's still in existence, but you can't repair a legacy once the entity is gone. Legacies are made great by success over time but can be ruined in an instant. I know this first hand having been a member of a squadron that crashed an F/A-18 on the unit's final flight, ruining an amazing reputation and cementing a legacy. In addition to destroying a jet and seriously injuring a pilot, all of the squadron's successes, victories and achievements were instantly dashed by a single event caused by a lapse of judgment, focus and professionalism. I can't describe the frustration and disappointment of those of us who put so much effort into an organization to see it end in failure.

I recently flew my final flight in the A-10 and was struck by the attention to detail and pride displayed by our maintainers, crew chiefs, operations personnel and fellow flight crews. What struck me was that our Airmen are as sharp and focused today as they were on my first flight in the A-10 over six years ago. The jets are in great shape and are as reliable as ever. The fact that we're even able to conduct flight operations so late in the BRAC process is testament to this unit's professionalism, focus and tenacity. I have full confidence in our ability to maintain this high level of professionalism through the end of flight ops here at Willow Grove, but want to stress the importance of maintaining our focus on safety and doing things right. Now is not the time to cut corners. We must maintain our high standards and diligence to the task at hand until the last jet departs and our flying mission is complete.

When the 111th Fighter Wing ceases flying operations, it will have been an active flying unit from 1924 — 2010. I would like to point out that it's not the dates that will define our legacy but instead it's the dash between them. The dash not only represents the countless deployments, sorties, maintenance man hours, and sacrifices our Airmen have made for over 86 years, but also the conduct and professionalism maintained throughout this difficult changing of missions. If there was ever a unit with an excuse to lose focus and throw in the towel, it would be a BRAC'd unit, losing its aircraft with no definitive follow on mission. But that is not the 111th's nature and therefore will not be our legacy as a Fighter Wing. Be proud of that fact!

Serving with honor

By 2nd Lt. Howard "Bud" Evans
111th Fighter Wing Honor Guard Team
Officer-in-Charge

So you think you know about the Base Honor Guard? Keep reading! You used to be a member of the Honor Guard? Keep reading! You heard that it will consume all of your time? Keep reading! You think they just do funerals? Keep reading!

Prior to becoming the Honor Guard OIC, I was a proud member of the Honor Guard team. Members of the Honor Guard joined for different reasons, but the resounding reason centers on "giving back to the Wing, the Air Force and the veterans that came before us". The Base Honor Guard creed is, "To Honor With Dignity." This means, first and foremost, we must maintain our history and exceptionally high standards as we honor those who served. The Ceremonial Guardsmen that participate in Military Funeral Honors will continue to be the cornerstone of the Base Honor Guard Program but, that is not all we do.

The 111th Honor Guard participates in military and public ceremonies across the state of Pennsylvania (and beyond), representing the Air Force and the 111th Fighter Wing as we proudly display the colors. This may interest some of you. Others may be interested in our participation with Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion and other veteran related organizations, or joining the Drill Team. Some interest may be generated by the fact we march in some of the oldest parades in the United States and perform opening ceremonies for local sports teams. As I stated earlier, we need you. Lastly, I am a true believer in mentors and those of you that have served in the past are welcome to return and contribute to the team as a trainer/mentor. Your past training and knowledge are in great demand.

The Air Force Honor Guard Web site states, "The Ceremonial Guardsman is an individual of good reputation, having integrity, ethical conduct and exhibiting standards which merit respect; responsible for protecting and overseeing the maintenance of standards on and off duty". It is truly an occupation which requires outstanding devotion and commitment to duty. The men and women volunteering to be Ceremonial Guardsmen are among the sharpest in the Wing! If you are ready to submit yourself to the highest professional standards of your career, consider joining the 111th Fighter Wing Base Honor Guard. Feel free to contact me at (215) 443-1423 or email me at: howard.evans@ang.af.mil or Senior Master Sgt. John Heidrick (215) 443-1842 or john.heidrick@ang.af.mil. For more information, visit the Air Force Honor Guard at: www.honorguard.af.mil.

Going virtual — Personnel records to go electronic

The Force Support Squadron is currently auditing the Unit Personnel Record Group (UPRG) for every member of the Wing in anticipation of sending the records off base NLT June 1.

You may receive documents removed from your record during the audit via your Commander Support Staff personnel. These documents are being removed because the documents are already electronic or no longer required. These documents are still very important to you and you should keep them.

Once we have completed the audit your UPRG will be sent to the Air Reserve Personnel Center (ARPC) to be scanned and then available to you via the internet (instructions will follow on how to access your documents).

If you would like to have a copy of your entire UPRG prior to it being sent to ARPC, please send an e-mail ASAP to: 111thERECORDS.CONVERSION@ang.af.mil. If you have any questions or comments, please contact (215) 443-1362.

Sexual Assault Response Program provides help for victims

By Staff Sgt. Julie Parker
111th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

Nearly 600 sexual assaults were reported throughout the Air Force in fiscal 2009, but the majority of men and women who experience a sexual assault, 78 percent and 79 percent respectively, choose not to report the incident, according to Department of Defense (DOD) officials.

There is no time span limiting the victim from reporting the sexual assault. It could have happened either two minutes or twenty years ago. Reporting is the critical first step to being offered the variety of resources available to people who have experienced sexual violence.

"Why so many people choose not to come forward vary. They may blame themselves or think others blame them for what happened. They may fear their career will be jeopardized because of their involvement in an investigation or that others may question their lifestyle and choices, but in order to prevent sexual assault, we have to know about it," said Major Christine Munch, 111th Fighter Wing Executive Officer.

Major Munch is the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC) and the focal point of contact for the Wing's Sexual Assault Response Program (SAPR), which means she is responsible for making sure a victim support system exists capable of responding to all reported sexual assaults, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, occurring on or off the installation.

According to the major, when someone comes forward to report an assault, it is the job of the SARC to provide clear, accurate information on reporting options available and ensure the safety and medical needs of a sexual assault victim are met and, unless the victim declines services, assign a victim advocate.

Considered the SARC's greatest asset, a victim advocate is a fully trained volunteer who provides one-on-one direct support to a victim. They assist victims through the initial response, investigation, legal and recovery processes. Although advocates don't provide clinical counseling or legal and investigative guidance, they do provide information on available options and resources enabling the victim to make an informed decision. The SARC ensures the victim advocates are from different squadrons on base and represent both males and females along the spectrum of rank.

"As a victim advocate, you would work closely with partnering agencies in the community to assist victims through crisis intervention, legal advocacy, and follow-up care," explained Major Munch.

She added that victim advocates can refer a victim to different supporting agencies, such as the chapel, mental health, or a health care professional and are trained to assist family or significant others who are affected by their loved one's experience. They will continue to help the victim as long as their support is required.

"Because the advocates need to be available around the clock, it would make sense if he or she was an AGR, but it's not required. Anyone interested in becoming a victim advocate for us should contact me," urged the major. "Sexual assault is the most under reported crime in America today, and we have to continue to strive to ensure our members are aware that sexual assault is a crime and is not tolerated."

Sexual assault in all branches of the armed forces continues to be a problem. The DOD's fiscal year 2009 report on sexual assault in the military was released in March. It showed a total of 3,230 reports of sexual assault involving military service members, of these 546 involved Air Force members. Of those cases, 300 were unrestricted reports (the assault is reported up the chain; investigation ensues) involving an Airman as either the subject or victim. The remaining 246 cases were restricted reports (no report is made up the chain and no investigation is done) made by the victims.

Everyone from our senior leaders to our junior enlisted, as well as, civilian employees and dependents, are highly encouraged to remain on alert and become proactive who will report and prevent these types of unacceptable conduct and behavior at all times.

As Guardsmen, we have a responsibility to look out for each other. If you know someone who has been assaulted, it is your responsibility to encourage that individual to report it," said the major. "Preventing sexual assault is everyone's duty."

Attention deployers

Please ensure you take care of the PHA, HIV, Immunization, and Ballistic Eyewear requirements on Saturday mornings of the UTA's. These must be scheduled through your Unit Health Monitor (UHM) by calling x1300/1462. HIVs must be drawn within 90 days of your deployment so please pay particular attention to the NET (Not Earlier Than) date listed on the spreadsheet (if one is listed). If you require new gas mask inserts and/or prescription Ballistic eyewear, please bring a current eye glass prescription with you to your scheduled medical appointment. Once ordered, eyewear takes about two weeks to be received.

Additionally, all deployers must have a baseline ANAM test on file prior to deploying. ANAM stands for Automated Neuropsychological Assessment Metric and is simply a 20 minute computerized test that assesses your general cognitive functioning that can be used as a baseline to detect mild traumatic brain injury if you receive a blow to the head in the future. For more information regarding the ANAM test, contact Tech. Sgt. Susan McDowell at (215) 443-1387. Testing is accomplished by appointment only and can be scheduled during the week or on Saturday or Sunday afternoons of the UTA.

To clarify, the ONLY requirement that can be accomplished during the week is ANAM testing. ALL other requirements must be SCHEDULED and accomplished over the UTA.

Enlisted Field Advisory Council (EFAC): Advocating for YOU

By Staff Sgt. Gordon Beecroft
111th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

EFAC is an organization built for you by you. Are you aware that the Enlisted Council organized some of the major morale events for the 111th Fighter Wing members; events that you have attended such as Sports Day and the Party at the Mill? In fact, the EFAC Council has organized community service programs such as the Philabundance food drive, the Ronald McDonald House "Clothing for Children," and other campaigns designed to give back to the community.

"We have to lead by example. It's not always take, take, take," said recently elected President Tech. Sgt. Talita Acevedo, 111th Force Support Squadron. "We're interested in giving back."

The EFAC consists of a group of enlisted Wing members who volunteer their time and experience exploring issues which are gathered in an open forum, giving the enlisted force a mechanism for their concerns and suggestions.

"The EFAC is important to the 111th Fighter Wing because it provides an avenue for all enlisted members to voice their concerns and suggestions," said past President Senior Master Sgt. Scot Baughman, 111th Force Support Squadron.

"We provide a listening ear and a loud voice for the enlisted personnel who are not represented," said recently elected Vice President Tech. Sgt. Charlotte Baker, 111th Fighter Wing.

The Council seeks to serve the 111th Fighter Wing and the community at large through service programs, and quarterly events to boost the morale on base. While the EFAC Council has been around for many years Air Force wide, it is still at its infancy here at the 111th. The original structure of the 111th's EFAC, which began in March 2007, consisted of the Jr. EFAC (E-1 to E-5) and Sr. EFAC (E-6 to E-8). However in 2009, the separate councils decided to merge into one council to form a stronger bond between both councils. Since the beginning, the EFAC's goal has been to achieve total Wing representation which means we need you to join us, and help bring more recognition from every section and unit.

"We are always looking for new members and new ideas. I encourage everyone to come out and join us during our monthly meetings," said Sergeant Acevedo.

The EFAC council meets every drill weekend on Sunday at 9 a.m. in Wing Headquarters Building 203, Room 106.

Air Force officials announce uniform policy changes

Courtesy of Air Force Personnel Center
Public Affairs Office

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas – Air Force officials announced April 12 uniform policy updates resulting from recent Air Force Uniform Board decisions.

The following policy modifications are effective immediately unless otherwise stated and will be incorporated into Air Force Instruction 36-2903, Air Force Uniform Dress and Appearance.

The tucking of trousers on utility uniforms into boots will remain optional. This reverses a mandatory tuck-in requirement previously announced by the 98th Air Force Virtual Uniform Board. When tucked in or bloused, the trouser must be even and draped loosely over the top of the combat boot to present a bloused appearance.

The green fleece watch cap is approved for wear with the all-purpose environmental clothing system, improved rain suit, cold weather parka, sage green fleece and the physical training uniform.

Air Force officials encourage all Airmen to affix name, rank and service designator tapes to their sage green fleeces instead of waiting for the Oct. 1 mandatory wear date. However, officers wanting to wear a watch cap with the sage green fleece must now have their name, rank and service designator tapes affixed to the fleece effective immediately.

Other authorized cold weather items remain unchanged. They include the black or sage green leather, suede or knit gloves; black scarves that are tucked in; and black earmuffs.

Uniform officials remind Airmen that the sage green fleece can still be worn as a liner for the APECS without name, rank and service designator tapes. The black fleece will no longer be authorized for wear as an APECS liner on Oct. 1.

Air Force officials also modified the 97th AFUB decision that stated the women's A-line skirt would become the primary mess dress skirt for the Air Force. The change allows the side-slit mess dress skirt to continue to be worn as an optional item.

For more information on uniform policy changes, contact your chain of command or call the Total Force Service Center at (800) 525-0102.

Thank you from your 111th Fighter Wing First Sergeants' Council

The First Sergeants' Council of the 111th Fighter Wing sponsored a food drive the first three months of 2010. All of the collected food went to support a local food bank in eastern Montgomery County. After March's UTA, some fifty bags of food were delivered. Thanks to your donations the Inter-Faith Food Cupboard was able to help needy families in the local area. Depending on the need and the amount of food that they have on hand, they have been able to serve 85 to 146 families a month. From the recipients to the volunteers who work at the food cupboard, they are most grateful of your much needed donations.
